MABEL LEWIS TO BE QUEEN OF 1935 FAIR

Winner Announced Before Multitude at Dance Saturday Night

2,000 ATTEND AFFAIR

Final Drive For Votes Places Centerville Girl on Throne

Coming through with a surprise volume of votes Saturday night, Mabel Lewis, of Centerville, polled a total of 839,750 votes, to win the queenship of the Second Annual Washington Township Fair. Florence Martinelli, Niles girl, leading in the contest until the final tabulation Saturday night, finished second with 761,000 votes. Miss Lewis, to the amazement of officials and spectators alike, brought in 387,500 votes Saturday night to sew up the title.

Other girls, survivors of the first elimination contest several week ago, who will be maids with Miss Martinelli, are Vivian Luna, Decoto; Eleanor Silva, Newark; Irene Frates, Alvarado; Mildred Santos, Mission San Jose, and Evelyn Bettencourt, Irvington. None of the maids, with the exception of Miss Martinelli, increased her volume of votes since the last counting before the final.

Coronation ceremonies, at which Miss Lewis will be crowned queen of the five-day fete, will be held at the grand ball on the evening of July 3. The six maids will likewise be honored on that night. The queen, in addition to her complete coronation outfit, will be presented with an expensive diamond ring by the Lions Club, fair sponsor. The maids, who are also to be outfitted, will each receive a $25 wrist watch.

Miss Lewis, a popular member of the class of 1936 at the Washington Union High school, is seventeen years of age. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph D. Lewis, of Centerville.

Following the final tabulation of the votes, the winner was announced by Judge Allen G. Norris before the huge throng wno gathered at the gymnasium of the Centerville school. There were over 2,000 in attendance.

The tabulation Saturday night wrote the final chapter in the long and intense queen contest here. At the outset, more than two months ago, sixteen girls, representing all towns in the township, undertook to sell tickets for the huge dance held Satfirst elimination was held, leaving seven girls, the highest in their respective towns, to continue in the race. Of that seven, Miss Lewis was winner Saturday.

SEWER PETITIONS GO OVER STRONG AT DECOTO

Preponents of the sewer plan for Decoto are jubliant this week over the success of their petition, it was learned Tuesday. It is said that more than ninety per cent of the property owners in the proposed district have signed.

Frank J. Thomas, active in the work for the project, said that the election to form the district will be asked at an early date.

The sewer system, long a necessity in the town, was laid out in blue prints by H. F. Grey, mosquito abatement engineer. Funds will be asked through the Public Works Administration program.

Peter Decoto, head of the Decoto Chamber of Commerce, is a leader in the sewer campaign.

COUNTY JUNIOR CHAMBERS TO BE GUESTS OF NILES GROUP AT PICNIC SUNDAY

Preparations Under Way To Entertain Hundreds At Cobble Crest Park

Hundreds of Junior Chamber members, from all sections of Alameda county, will be guests with their wives and friends at a unique county meeting, to be held under the auspices of the Niles Junior Chamber of Commerce Sunday.

In the form of an all-day picnic and barbecue, the affair will be held at Al Juhl's Cobble Crest park, in Stonybrook canyon. The juniors will start the day early, in order to complete the program arranged this week.

At a committee meeting held Monday night, the tentative program was outlined, including races, games, diversions for the ladies, pony rides for the children and other forms of amusement. Chick Arntzen, in charge of the concessions, reported that there will be three stands, featuring popular games.

Four hundred pounds of prime beef have been arranged for, to be barbecued for the picnickers by Art Roderick and Henry Rego, both of whom have acquired fame as cooks. Salad, beans and beer will complete the menu.

Immediately following the picnic lunch, the county members will gathor for a brief session, to be presided over by J. J. Amaral, county president.

The afternoon will be spent at dancing on the new floor to music furnished by Frank Lewis and his band. Ray Crane, entertainment chairman, promises at least ten outstanding acts, to be staged during the afternoon.

The picnic is invitational, according to Sam Kearns, president. Guests will be required to show their cards, he said.

CATTLE DISPLAY WILL INTEREST DAIRYMEN, JULY 6

National And California Champion Cows to Be Shown at Fair

Dairymen throughout Alameda county will find great interest at the Washington Township Fair this year, in a display of cattle from the Troutmere Guernsey farm, which has the outstanding Guernsey herd on the west coast. The farm, located at Stanford University, is owned by R. W. Krobitzch. E. Miller is the manager, who will have charge of the fair display.

The Troutmere foundation animals, costing some $2000 apiece, were carefully chosen, Miller states. Chichona Lover Bold, prize bull, sired 28 daughters at the farm who averaged 628 pounds of butterfat apiece in twelve months. The present senior herd sire is Shuttlewick Dreadnaught, grandson of Shuttlewick Levity, twice grand national champion, once in 1927 and again in 1929.

The Troutmere farm, a pioneer in T. B. testing, was the first federal and state accredited herd in this respect, Miller said.

The display of the fine cattle will be held at the Washington Union High school farm 10 a. m. to 4 p. m. Saturday, July 6. Among the animals on display will be Troutmere Builder, 1934 state fair champion, and Troutmere Mae Kings Trixie, grand champion of the Pacific slope at Oakland in 1932, who gave 13,385 pounds of milk and 680 pounds of butterfat in one year.

Of further interest in the livestock displays at the fair will be that of twenty-one future farmers of the local chapter, who will show 100 head of dairy calves, raised in cooperation with the Golden State Company. The animals have been raised by the boys on shares with the dairy concern.

The twenty-one boys will display their animals for awards and ribbons to be given by the Centerville Lions Club. R. J. Werner, of the Golden State Company, will judge the animals at 2 p. m. on Saturday, July 6.

There will be five prizes for the best group of calves raised by any boy; four prizes will be awarded for the best individual calf in the show; one award will be made to the boy who has raised the best heifer previous to the show, and three awards will be made for the best showmanship.

E. E. Dias, well-known Niles contractor, is reported as critically ill at a San Francisco hospial.

SHERIFF CALLS ATTENTION TO FIREWORKS BAN

Calling attention to the large amounts of inflammable material, present this year in the form of abundant dry grass and weeds, Deupty Sheriff Hugo Radbruch issued warnings that use of fireworks in this district will be met with official action under ordinance No. 152, which bans the more showy of the July Fourth displays. Radbruch stated that cap pistols and sparklers do not come under the ban, and may be used. He pointed out that mere possession of the outlawed fireworks constitutes a violation of the law, and that a fine of $500 or a six-months sentence may be imposed for violators.

Amplifying the word of the deputy sheriff, are warnings by township fire chiefs, who declare that fire hazards this year make the use of fireworks impossible.

Serious Knee Injury Keeps Boy In Hospital

Complications setting in after a serious operation on his knee, have sent Gino Quarteroli, Niles boy, back to the Alameda County Hospital, where he is undergoing a series of treatments to prevent serious infection.

Young Quarteroli, injured in an impromptu football game at the Centerville high school, was taken to the hospital several weeks ago. His knee was found to be badly injured and an operation was necessary. He returned home apparently on the road to recovery about two weeks go, but after a three-day stay, was returned for further treatment.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

By Norman H. Parks, Publisher Register

It's All Tom's Idea

Our good friend, Tom Power, Irvington barrister, and legal advisor for the wealthy Hirsch clan, rushes into print with a two-column article, in an industrious attempt to set aside the conclusions of the writer's editorial in a recent issue of the Township Register wherein we stated that Mrs. W. A. Sloan was a "noble woman."

Legal duty often leads an attorney into such frigid zones that the warm blood of humanity becomes thickened and congealed. Apparently, strict interpretation of a law cannot be softened by the heartbeat of humanity, nor can the bowels of compassion be read between the line to ease the pain of the weak and the defenseless. The pound of flesh is demanded and taken, and everything is done with exactness to the crossing of a "T" and the dotting of an "I." Unlike the story of the "Merchant of Venice," there is no lovely Portia to dramatically adjudicate: "Take thou thy pound of flesh, but in the cutting it, if thou dost shed one drop of Christian blood, thy lands and goods are by the laws of Venice, confiscate unto the state of Venice."

Tom's article, we want it distinctly understood, was quite all right, and within the ethics of the law profession, but we do object to one insinuation: i. e., that we referred to the Hirschs as Shylocks. It remained for the attorney of these people to plant the idea in our mind, and create suspicion for Washington township people that amongst us, stepping out of the musty pages of literature, is the famous character of Shakespere in the flesh!

We Are a Bit Skeptical

President Roosevelt, choosing the closing days of the congressional session to sponsor a taxation program, having as its object, apparently, the penalization of great wealth, is viewed, we believe, by most progressive thinkers, with skepticism, possibly with well-grounded suspicion.

If a thing is good, it is generally the best policy to ask little of the motive that inspired that good. That applies, of course, to good actually done, not a good deed only suggested.

The latest Roosevelt excursion into uncharted legislative channels, appears to the writer as excel-

The union orchestra will provide music for dancing and for entertainment during the huge banquet, which is slated as one of the features of the evening.

GROWERS TO ASK $100 PER TON FOR CANNING APRICOTS

Best Canning Grades In This District and In Santa Clara Cunty

Local apricot growers, some being tempted by low offers for their canning grades, had their attention snapped to the San Jose area last week when producers in that region voted almost 300 strong to hold out for $100 per ton this year. The growers met in the Fremont Union High school at San Jose, to consider preseason information gathered from surveys of Santa Clara and adjacent county crops.

R. H. Brotherton, chairman of the meeting, gave an optimistic forecast of the season, when he stated that "this seems to be a good year for growers to get a good price for apricots." Prin-

BLIND DECOTO MAN IS KILLED BY FAST TRAIN

Apparently confused by the sound of the approaching Stockton flyer at about 9 a. m. yesterday at Decoto road crossing, Antone D. Goularte, 65, blind, of Decoto, met instant death when he stepped into the side of the fast moving engine.

Goularte, who has been blind for about ten years, has been a resident of the Decoto district for over forty years. He was well-known there, and a member of the I. D. E. S. and U. P. E. C. councils.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Mary Goularte, and by the following children: Edward D., Elizabeth, Wilbert, Edith and Anthony.

Reports that Goularte had committed suicide are unconfirmed.

PHONE TOLL GROUP MEETS TOMORROW AT DECOTO

Full power to proceed with plans to bring action in the drive to eliminate the five-cent phone toll between Washington township towns, will be asked by representatives of civic bodies tomorrow night, when they gather at the Decoto fire house for the second meeting of the newly formed district-wide "phone rate organization."

Plans to draw up demands have been made for the meeting, with intention to call another meeting in the near future at which representatives of the telephone company may state their case.

Miss Betty Murphy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Murphy, will leave today with Dr. and Mrs. E. L. Dow, of Alameda, for Nevada City, where she will remain for a month with the Dows.

SENIOR CHAMBER STARTS SUMMER VACATION MONDAY

Next Meeting of Group to Be On Third Monday In September

Winding up affairs for the summer months, the Niles Chamber of Commerce adjourned Monday for a twelve-week vadation, during which time pressing business will be transacted by the board of directors. Business at the final meeting consisted of a series of committee reports.

Roland Bendel, secretary of the Decoto Chamber of Commerce and a guest at the meeting, was called upon to tell of activity under way to cause elimination of phone toll rates between local towns. He stated that a temporary organization, composed of representatives from all sections of the district, have taken the matter in hand, and are sounding sentiment of telephone subscribers on the question. At a meeting to be held at Decoto tomorrow night, reports will be made on apparent opinion in the district, and a plan of action drawn up. The Niles chamber will be represented by E. A. Ellsworth.

A. J. Petsche, secretary, and head of the Lions Club display committee for the Township Fair, told of progress in arrangement for the show, and explained that the decorations which appeared on First street, Niles, Sunday, were put up by the Lions Club. All other township towns were similiarly decorated, Petsche said.

W. B. Kirk, hedge committee chairman, was authorized to make whatever expenditures were necessary during the summer months to care for the First street hedge.

Harvey Braun reported on the participation of the Niles Boy Scout troop in the Livermore Rodeo parade. He stated that dars to transport the boys had been furnished by troop committeemen, and Ed. Rose.

H. L. Scott gave a report on the standing of the teams in the south county league, pointing out that Niles, Newark and Decoto were tied for first place, with one more game apiece to be played.

SCHOOL STATISTICS SHOW PERMANENCE OF POPULATION

An index of the permanency of Niles families is noted in official reports made by Principal E. Dixon Bristow, of the Niles Grammar school, his year.

With state statistics on enrollment showing a steady decrease in school population, Niles stands out as an exception with an average daily attendance of approximately 322 for the past year, according to Bristow's report. He stated that this was an increase over last year's, and would insure reception of state funds for all of the teachers now on the staff. He reported that there were only sixteen transfers this year, a very low percentage.

In discussing conditions among the children, Bristow stated that there has been a vast decrease in the number who require help from the teachers and Parent-Teachers' Association to buy shoes, clothing and food.

With better conditions noted from this fact, E. A. Ellsworth, Niles realtor, stated that the number of vacancies in this district is lower than at any time in the past three years. Other Niles businessmen stated that sales have been picking up steadily during the past months.

Wesley Dexter Gordon, pastor of the Congregational church here, is recovering from a tonsilectomy undergone recently.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Seeking death by throwing herself from the summit of Lone Mesa, to escape dishonor, at the hands of a drunken desperado, Sonya Savarin allows herself to be rescued by her suddenly sobered and repentant attacker. The girl is a self-appointed physician to the Navajo Indians, living on an Arizona sheep ranch with her brother Serge, his wife, Lila, and their small daughter, Babs. For a year she has been engaged to Rodney Blake, wealthy New Yorker, but her heart is with the friendless Navajos and she evades a wedding.

CHAPTER II.—Sonya pulls Little Moon, wife of Two Fingers, a Navajo, through the crisis of an illness. Two Fingers is deeply grateful.

CHAPTER III.—In the desert village, shopping, Sonya again meets the man whose advances she had repulsed on Lone Mesa. He tells her he bitterly regrets his action and has never had a minute's peace since that day. Sonya is affected, but unforgiving. She hears rumors of a Border bandit "El Capitan Diablo," who crucifies his "double-crossers" and has a dire reputation as a despoiler and murderer, vaguely connecting him with her attacker.

CHAPTER IV.—Sonya pays a visit to Little Moon and finds her well on her way to recovery. On her return she rides to the top of Lone Mesa. There she again comes upon the strange young man, but she no longer fears him. When he reiterates his sorrow over his misconduct she indicates forgiveness and assures him a man can always change for the better.

CHAPTER V.—Befriending the wife of Hosteen Nez, a Navajo, she adds him to her circle of devoted friends. At a neighborhood dance she meets the mysterious stranger of the Mesa and demands that he tell her his name. Finally he confides to her that his right name is Starr Stone, that his mother believes him dead, and that he goes by a different name in this region. He departs with a tall, fierce Mexican, with whom he is mysteriously associated.

CHAPTER VI.—Sonya, with a feeling of shame, realizes she is falling in love with a man whom she can only class as a renegade and outlaw, knowing that under the circumstances she can never marry Blake. From an odd character of the desert, known as the "Servant of the Lord," Sonya learns Stone is alive and safe.

CHAPTER VII.—An influenza epidemic among the Indians keeps Sonya busy for many days. Stone greatly helps her in her care for the stricken Navajos. Sonya and Stone declare their love for each other, all doubt in the mind of the girl being ended.

CHAPTER X.—Sonya realizes she is in the power of El Capitan Diablo. In his stronghold she is committed to the care of an elderly Spanish woman, to await the arrival of the chief. A younger woman, Concha, views with apprehension the arrival of Stone, whom she loves, evidently a prisoner, with El Capitan Diablo.

CHAPTER XI.—At the Savarin ranch there is dire consternation over the disappearance of Sonya. Searching parties, working diligently, are unable to find any trace of the girl. Her horse, arriving home riderless, is the first indication of harm having come to her. With Serge, Marston visits the village store, the last place where Sonya is known to have been, but finds no clues. Her Navajo friends, remembering all they owe Sonya, take the trail, finding evidence of the presence of an airship where Sonya might presumably have been seized.

"Nor that I bring into Mexico and along the Border merchandise of great value?"

"No, senor."

"Nor that that merchandise crosses into the United States by my little gray ships of the sky to be sent to New York on the railroad?"

"No, senor."

"You are well schooled, senorita," he sneered. "I make bold to compliment you both. You did not know that Quince is—or was—my ablest man in both countries? That he knows as much of El Diablo as El Diablo knows about himself? That he can do anything connected with—my business—from seining the sea at low tide for floats, tied to sunken contraband, to flying a plane? You did not know all this?"

He was leaning forward now, searching the girl's face with boring eyes to catch the faintest change, the slightest flicker of betrayal.

"I did not, senor," she said.

"H'm," said El Diablo savagely, "and when you so quickly stooped and picked from the floor that small brass can which Senor Parks dropped from his pocket, you still did not know what you were finding?"

"No," said Sonya, "and would not now if Manuel there had not told the Senora about it—called it a five-tael can of 'black molasses.'"

Manuel leaped from his seat, talking swiftly, facing his master. And somewhere behind her a woman stifled a scream. But Diablo was on his feet, his fist on the table.

"So!" he thundered, "my people talk behind me, do they? They mention that which is never to be mentioned? I shall deal with you—and you, senora—later. Now bring me Quince."

At that Sonya felt the world go round for one terrible second. She clutched the chair back tightly.

And from somewhere at the right there came the sound of marching feet, the swift step of men obeying a master. Through the dappled shade cast by the poplar trees five figures moved into her line of vision, four who walked abreast in twos and in their midst a fifth—Starr Stone as she had seen him last, in cowboy boots and dungarees belted at his lean hips, a faded denim shirt.

He was haggard and his eyes were large in his tanned face, and his arms were bound behind him. He was a prisoner with all a prisoner's indignities heaped upon him, but his tall form was erect, his blue eyes dark with the spreading pupils. He strode toward the table with his gaze on Diablo's face and saw no other in the silent mass.

"Senor," he said.

"Senor," said El Capitan, and the smile was gone from his face. It was black with fury.

"For five years, Quince, you have been with me—my best and ablest man. You have done my bidding quickly. You have led my raids. You have put my—merchandise—safely through its secret ways. I have called and you have come, always. Always until lately. Lately you have come on laggard feet. You have held back at my orders. You have disobeyed me. And I have now the reason. That reason is a woman. A woman whom you have set before El Capitan Diablo. Whose word has been more to you than my word. Who, through your instruction doubtless, has come upon the key of my activities. Who has caught Quatro with the goods in his own store. Who holds Diablo and all his future in the hollow of her hand. Or would so hold him had it not been for Quatro's swift action in the matter. Senor—behold the woman!"

He had half risen again, leaning with one broad hand on the table. With the other he pointed dramatically to Sonya. And like a flash Starr Stone whirled and saw her.

It was the first inkling he had had that she was not safe in her own country, and her own pursuits, and the shock of it drained his face to a ghastly pallor.

"Sonya!" his lips formed soundlessly.

"Yes," said the girl defiantly, "they took me from my horse two nights ago—kidnaped me—by airplane—and brought me here because I stumbled on the fact that Parks is their agent in the smuggling of narcotics across the line. They think you told me—that you and I have planned to double-cross this wicked bandit here—this beast who says I'm lying!"

She waved a hand at El Capitan, nodded her black head toward him.

"Ah! A beast, am I? El Capitan Diablo a beast?"

"Yes, senor—and worse," said Sonya Savarin. "You may kill me—as I do not doubt you will—but I am an American, and I do not bend to you either in body or soul. We are both Americans."

"Oh, Americans! And Americans do not double-cross?"

"No, senor."

"Well, we shall see. Quince—attention. What do you say for yourself?"

The tall man standing in the mottled shade looked long in his master's face. What years of wrongdoing, of obedience, of fear, were in that look only they two might say. For a long time it held between the wild blue eyes, the deadly black ones.

Then Starr Stone turned to Sonya.

"A misstep in my early youth—it doesn't matter now what it was—put me in the power of El Capitan Diablo. For my freedom's sake I cast in my lot with him. For my life's sake I could never leave him afterward. I have raided, burned, and pillaged, but I have never killed a man nor harmed a woman or a child. I have been his brains in smuggling, his ablest lieutenant, as he says. But now I'm through.

"With death as my sure reward for what I'm saying, I say here and now, before these witnesses, that I am done forever. Done with all wrong and all evil. That the leopard changes his spots at last. For the love of you in my soul I am made over new. They will kill me soon, and I hope they'll send you with me with all my heart—though hell itself can hold no torture for me to compare with the knowledge that I have brought you to this. That will be more punishment than my lost soul can bear. Oh, Sonya, forgive me for what I've done to you."

"Forgive you?" panted the girl, half sobbing. "Forgive you? I glory in you! And we'll go together, never fear! If not one way, then another. It will not be a long good-by, I promise you."

"Soul's covenant," said Starr Stone.

"Soul's covenant," she answered.

But here El Capitan leaped to his booted feet, his fist on the table again.

"It will not?" he rasped. "You think it will not? Carramba! El Capitan Diablo has yet the final word. You to the winds and the vultures, Quince, and may you remember many things in the—the interval.

"You," he turned to Sonya and leveled a finger at her, "I give to that one among my men who rises to this Quince's empty place. Manuel, my compliments, the lady. I believe you like a white-skinned woman with curls in the hair. And after you—the rest. And that, as they say across the Border, is that. Take them both away."

The four men moved to surround their prisoner, the marching feet passed swiftly, and Sonya watched the tall bronze head go out of the shade into the sun—around a corner.

The world and all it held turned dark before her just as the senora reached out a motherly arm.

She dimly heard Manuel saying, "Careful, senora, careful—she is mine."

CHAPTER XIII

Love's Sacrifice.

WHEN she opened her eyes again it was dark in the deep-walled room, and she lay on the ancient bed. For a while she lay in a sort of stupid peace, gathering her faculties, which seemed to have been scattered to the four winds.

And then suddenly the values of life dropped into their appointed places, like the brilliant colors in a kaleidoscope, and she knew where she was and what had happened.

El Capitan had spoken, and she was still a prisoner, the property of a dapper Mexican bandit with predatory eyes and laughing, thin lips, Manuel the aviator. And Starr Stone was gone—oh, heaven! Gone to that ghastly fate which lurked in the poignant words, "you to the winds and the vultures." The wild blue eyes that had darkened and changed under the mandates of life, the long hands with their tender touch, the lips so warm upon her own!

And presently the senora came padding softly to the door on heavy feet, for she was old and excellently fed, and entered to her kindly ministrations.

Sonya whirled and faced her, her dark eyes burning in the shadows.

"Senora," she said desperately, "have pity on me! Can you not help me? A knife, senora—with my next meal—left on the tray? In the name of that holy Woman whom you worship, please, senora!"

"I cannot, child," she answered gently. "Manuel would kill me. Come, let me wash your sweet white body with fresh water. And there is perfume, and a woman's clothes to dress you in—a scarlet dress, and golden shoes for your feet. Tonight you rest—Manuel's orders—but tomorrow you wear these things for him. You must forget."

Forget!

Forget—the vultures and the wind! Forget the stars, the soft winds blowing, the creak of leather, and Starr Stone's hand on hers laid on her pommel!

"If you have within you, senora," she said piteously, "any remnant of a woman's pity for another woman lost to all the light of life, leave me to fight it out alone. Leave me now."

For a long time the other stood and watched her, calculating, then nodded and turned away.

"I have not forgotten—for thirty years," she said cryptically. "You shall have your night, querida."

The sound of the bolt falling echoed in the empty passage.

And Sonya Savarin, who had guarded life so well, now stood at bay, holding her breath, pondering desperately how she might destroy it.

If only she had her bags! Her little case of instruments! But she had nothing—and Starr Stone was dying now, perhaps, or would tomorrow.

There was nothing left to do, no foes to face with lifted head, no schemes of hope to make, no one whom she might coax to help her.

And so at last Sonya, having exhausted all her resources, scant at best in this terrible situation, made ready to bow in resignation. She knelt by the ancient bed, which had no doubt seen tragedies before, and folding her hands addressed her soul to its Maker in sorrow and humility.

How long she knelt so she never afterward could recall. Sometimes she prayed, weeping, for that other soul which had so grievously misspent its days, and these were fervent prayers, abased and agonized before the heavenly throne, begging for that mercy of the eleventh hour which has been divinely promised; sometimes for Serge and Lila and little Babs, even for Darkness. For herself she asked scant favor. It had been always so with her. Service to her fellow men, comfort for all suffering things, had been her passionate aim in life.

Of herself she thought last and least, of Starr Stone most.

If only they had met in those early days of which he spoke, before that one misstep had put him in El Diablo's power, made him an outlaw, a Border renegade. When the sweetness, the kindness in him had been paramount. Before sin and wrong had put the leopard spots upon him.

But the spots were changed at last when it was too late. To his face he had repudiated El Capitan, signed his own death warrant, for anyone leaving the dark service of this monstrous bandit put himself "on the spot" as truly as any in more modern places.

And he had done it deliberately, to prove to her that he was changed even to the death. The courage which had shone in his face at that repudiation had been magnificent. He knew, none better, the fate of El Diablo's double-crossers, and he double-crossed him high-handedly and with supreme finality.

"Oh, Starr!" wept Sonya with her forehead on her clasped hands. "Oh, my man of all men! My one and only love!"

In the warm dark silence the heart in her seemed to melt in anguish, the tides of life to run swiftly out.

For her it was the ebb of finite things, the last low hour before the end. In a dull coma of hopelessness, her face swollen with weeping, she sank lower and lower against the great bed, her lips apart, her black head disheveled.

And into this last deep abyss there dropped a tiny sound.

The outside bolt, huge and heavy, slipped slowly in its slot!

Instinctively the girl shrank back against the bed.

Manuel!

Manuel, her master!

She stifled a scream on her open mouth, her hand across it.

And then a voice, whispering into the darkness, a breath of a voice as lovely as music, said "Senorita!"

"Si," said Sonya, gasping, "I am here."

There was the murmur of a moving form, and Concha knelt carefully before her. Sonya reached out and touched her incredibly, but the girl drew sharply from the contact.

"Attend," she said, "if you are brave—are you so, senorita?"

"I am very brave," said Sonya simply.

"Then listen. You I hate from my soul's bottom—I could strike you now with my two hands—but there is—another, whom I love. Oh, Mary Mother! Love!" she said as if to her inward self. She stopped a moment then went on.

"If you can follow me without a sound there is—a hope. Can you walk so?"

"Without a sound," said Sonya, and bent forward to unlace her boots. Swiftly she took them off.

The Mexican girl reached out and took her by the sleeve. That hatred in her would not let her touch her flesh. Softly, step by step, the two young things crossed the silent room, listened at the partly opened door, and slid through it. In the long dark passage they listened again, then went south along the wall toward a door which also stood ajar.

Through this—and the night sky was above them, the tall cottonwoods against the stars. Like wraiths of the gloom they entered the grove, passed through it, came out on the open landing field.

Before the little hangar Sonya saw in the starlight the ghostly shape of a little gray ship. They made toward it swiftly, and as they reached its protecting wing a man stepped out from the hangar behind; a tall man, naked to the waist, his head bare, his feet also, a man who was prepared for "spreading up" on the morrow. Starr Stone drew them both against the gray ship's side.

"Sonya!" he whispered. "Oh, Sonya!" Then, "Listen. We have one chance in a million. This plane is still warm from a trip Manuel took this afternoon. I heard it come in about dark."

"Yes," said Sonya, "so did I."

"It is fueled. They are always so. Thank God—and Concha—we are here. I have just disabled the other one, I think, though not as permanently as I could wish. We've got to take that one chance, Sonya. It's our only one. Get in quick."

With his hands under her elbows Sonya went up along the side, dropped into the little seat, felt swiftly for the safety belt.

"Safe?" the man whispered tensely.

"Safe," she answered pulling the buckle tight.

Then she saw Starr Stone turn to Concha and take her in his arms.

"Concha," he said softly but loud enough for Sonya to hear the whispered words, "I leave thee. It is fate. But never will I forget thee, nor this thing which you have done. Always while I live I will remember. Adios, little one."

MORE ON Growers to Ask

cipal speaker was Ed. Cohen, Los Altos grower.

Cohen said that crops in all districts he had visited, including Hollister, Modesto, Winters and Brentwood, had been small. The Hollister section, he said, looked good in spots, but that other orchards are checked and spotted. The usual brown rot conditions are present and estimates by growers show the total crop will be somewhere around 12,000 tons.

With fractional crops in nearly all producing areas, Cohen called the Santa Clara valley, which includes the southern Alameda county area, "the one brigh. spot in the whole northern California section." He said that in all probability this region and the San Joaquin valley area would have to supply a heavy cannery demand.

Along with the Los Altos and Saratago districts, Washington township is known as a producer of the best grade of apricots in the state. At the present time it appears that the crop here, while not heavy, will be of fine quality. The fruit is sizing up well and is clean-skinned.

Local growers, who are familiar with conditions elsewhere, and know of the market situation, have stated their intention to hold out for "$80 or better," or dry.

Four Species of Birds Still Keep Nests Secret

Only four or five kinds of birds of the United States still build nests and hatch their eggs in spots unknown to man, says the Smithsonian Institution bulletin. One of the last gaps in the Smithsonian collection of nests and eggs has been filled by the receipt from a Cornell university graduate student of those belongings to Harris' sparrow, found near Churchill, in the Hudson Bay country.

Up to a short time ago, the breeding place of this pretty sparrow, which comes South to the Mid-West in its winter migrations, was completely unknown. The bird was able to keep its breeding place secret because of its restricted habitat.

Among the birds whose summer meeting places are still unknown, probably the most notable is the bristle thighed curlew, which winters in the southern Pacific from Hawaii to New Caledonia. It is known that it breeds in the North, probably in western Alaska, but nobody ever has been able to find one of its nests.

Still another is the New Mexican duck, a bird of a restricted habitat in New Mexico and western Texas.

Effects of Paresis

Paresis may attack the brain or the spinal cord or both. The condition develops gradually. The victim undergoes a change of character, his normal traits tending to fly to their extremes. If he was economical, notes a writer in the Kansas City Star, he becomes a waster. If he was quiet and reserved, he becomes loud and exhibitionistic. Immoral tendencies develop. The victim often complains of headache, backache and dizziness. Later the speech thickens and handwriting changes distinctly.

Mexican States

Mexico is a federal republic of 30 states. There is also a federal district. The states are: Aguascalientes, Lower California, Campeche, Coahuila, Colima, Chiapar, Chihuahua, Durango, Guanajuato, Guerero, Hidalgo, Jalisco, Mexico, Michoacan, Morelos, Nayarit, Nuevo Leon, Oaxaca, Puebla, Queretaro, Quintana Roo, San Luis Potosi, Sinaloa, Sonora, Tobasco, Tamaulipas, Tlaxcala, Vera Cruz, Yucatan and Zacatecas.

Bankers Have Frolic at Linda Vista Sunday

More than 1500 members and guests of the San Francisco federal reserve and the San Francisco American Trust clubs, attended a picnic Sunday at the Linda Vista park, Mission San Jose. The event was given under the auspices of the Eastbay American Trust club.

Residents of Washington township, as well as the picnickers, were given a treat during the day, when Capt. E. E. McIntyre, and three stunting airplanes, swooped and dove over the Mission.

The picnic, an all-day affair, was the first joint annual outing held by the banking groups. Following the luncheon the picnickers enjoyed games, races and swimming. An Oakland orchestra furnished music for dancing during the afternoon and evening.

One of the features of the afternoon was a series of comedy dives and swimming by Al Kalunki, of Lakeside plunge.

"Messenger From Allah"

Between 1899 and 1920 in British Somaliland, a fanatic called "The Mad Mullah" carried on a one-man war with Great Britain. Finally one day, when in the desert with relatives and counselors, an airplane appeared in the sky. Never having seen one before he told his party it was a messenger from Allah. The "messenger" dropped his message—a bomb—and killed nearly all of them. The Mullah escaped—but learned his lesson.—Freling Foster in Collier's Weekly.

Fred Muller Homes In 13th to Beat Missions

Fred Muller, former Newark boy and local athlete, proved his worth again Saturday, when he came tobat for the Oaks in the thirteenth inning of their game with the San Francisco Missions, and poled out a home-run with the bases loaded, to win the game 9 to 6.

Muller, who had made only one hit all week, was considered an easy out after Hal Stitzel, Mission hurler, had fanned Jim Tobin, rated as a heavy hitter. Muller chose to make his second hit of the week, however, and drove the ball far over the left field fence, to score four runs, and sew up the contest.

RURAL SANITARY SURVEY UNDER WAY HERE

A statewide program, for the purpose of improving rural sewage disposal, was launched in November, 1934, and is being carried on through cooperation of the State Department of Public Health, the county health department, the S. E. R. A. and the federal public health service. Washington township, along with the rest of Alameda county, is a section in which the work is being carried on, according to F. A. Schramm, assistant state director of sanitation.

An important part of the program, originated several years ago, is the construction of an excellent type dry-vault outside toilet, after designs issued by the public health service. In the present program the public is acquainted with the plan through a survey. Labor and supervision will be furnished by the S. E. R. A. with the householder required to furnish the materials for construction.

At the same time that the program is explained, additional data is gotten from the householder, covering the schemes of water supply, depth of wells, disposal of waste and other conditions outside the walls of the home.

This information should be of value to all householders, Schramm said, because it tells from actual experience how best to meet these sanitary problems, and brings out the troubles that might be expected from conditions of soil, subsoil, etc., as they vary in the different districts of the county and the state.

• Right now is the time to get real blow-out protection. Remember, the dangers of blow-outs are with you wherever you drive. So why not play safe — why not get Life-Saver Golden Ply blow-out protection before a high-speed blow-out throws your car out of control?

Here's How Blow-outs Happen

At the high speeds that are common these days, terrific heat is generated inside the tire. This heat causes rubber and fabric to separate. A tiny blister forms — grows bigger until BANG — the tire blows out, and your car may plunge off the road.

How the Golden Ply Works

But in the new Goodrich Safety Silvertown the Life-Saver Golden Ply resists the heat inside the tire. The rubber and fabric don't separate. No blisters form. And these high-speed blow-outs are prevented before they get started.

Let us show you this new Silvertown. Press your hand on its deep-grooved tread. Feel its big, husky cleats grip. Then you'll understand why Silvertowns give protection against dangerous side skids. And notice the ruggedness of this extra-thick tread that gives extra mileage at no extra cost.

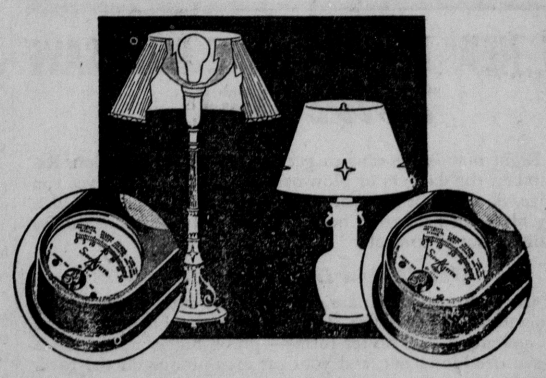
SEE for yourself,
THE RIGHT AND WRONG OF LAMPS AND LIGHT!



RIGHT . . . At a distance of 1½ feet from this lamp a minimum of 20 units of light are procured. This quantity of light scientists say is needed for reading fine print.

WRONG . . . A decorative lamp of low height and narrow shade. At a distance of 1½ feet—the correct seeing distance—only a few units of light are produced. Such a lamp causes eyestrain.

Without cost to you a P. G. & E. sales-service representative will gladly check your home lighting with a Sight Meter

NOW you can have a lamp designed for eye comfort as well as ornamental and decorative beauty. It is the lamp designed by the Illuminating Engineering Society to meet the need of Better Light for Better Sight. Due to remarkable improvements in design, this lamp is unlike the many ordinary lamps you may now have in your home or have seen for sale on the bargain counters.

Here are four good reasons why these radically different lamps give you more light for your money and protect the eyesight of every child, youth or adult who uses them for reading, study or sewing.

It gives several times as much light as the ordinary lamp because the shade is wide at the bottom and open at the top and gives light a chance to spread over a wider area.

It gives soft, diffused light without glare because of its inside opal glass diffuser and reflector.

It gives light from correct height because the standard is high enough to allow light to spread where you need it.

It gives beauty and decoration because more symmetrical proportions between shade and standard are possible.

Protect your eyes and the eyes of your family with one of these new lamps. They are made in either floor or table models. Prices are very moderate and within the range of everyone.

"People Will Talk," with Charlie Ruggles and Mary Boland is the feature for Wednesday. Jackie Coogan is in the cast of "Mountain Mystery."

"Stolen Harmony," with Ben Bernie, and "Florentine Dagger" with Donald Woods and Margaret Lindsay are on the bill for Thursday, but the big feature will be the Baer-Braddock fight pictures, showing the form of the new champ.

Paul Muni, greatest character actor of the screen, comes Friday and Saturday in the daring film, "Black Fury." The Hoosier School Master" is on the bill with Charlotte Henry and Norman Foster The Baer-Braddock fight will be shown on these two days, as well.

TRIPLE TIE LOOMS FOR SECOND HALF OF NEW LEAGUE

Sixteen strike-outs is a record hung up Sunday by Fred Woods, lanky Niles pitcher, when the local nine defeated the Decoto Merchants to leap into a tie for first place in the league race. The final score was 11 to 3. The lead is a three-way deadlock at the present writing, with Newark, Niles and Decoto having three wins and one defeat.

Turning their eleven hits into eleven runs, the Niles aggregation was at no time in danger of losing the game Six runs, marked up in the first inning, laid the contest in the cooler for the local boys. C. Pine, Fields and Brown all hit two for five for Niles One of the sensations of the game was C. Pine's homer in the first frame. He was first man up. Muniz pounded out a homer in the third inning.

Decoto scored two of their runs in the first frame when Correia and Amaral scored on Laybourne's double and Keifer's single. Laybourne and Correia played fine ball.

Forfeiting the league game before the contest started because they had two players unsigned, the Pleasanton team lost a "practice" game to Newark. The score was 17 to 7.

In the biggest upset of the day, the Irvington nine, stung to superb baseball, defeated the Alvarado Merchants 7 to 3.

The games Sunday, June 30, will be the finals of the league half. Niles, Decoto and Newark, all with three wins and one loss, play the weaker nines, Pleasanton, Alvarado and Irvington. Should the former three win the title will be split three ways, necessitating a playoff previous to the championship game at the Township Fair on July 4. Newark, first half winner, is assured of a place in the finals.

The games Sunday: Niles at Pleasanton; Decoto at Alvarado, and Irvington at Newark.

Uniformity of Bankruptcy Laws Demanded by Debtors

Mr. Norman H. Parks,
The Township Register,
Niles California.
Dear Mr. Parks

It seems that our good friend, Thomas J. Power, attorney for Hirsch interests, takes exception to your recent editorial entitled, "A Noble Fight by a Noble Woman." The people of this community know you well enough to know that what you say in an editorial is your honest opinion, and not inspired by money interests. If now and then you have made a mistake, you have been generous to correct it, and if you have made a mistake in this instance, I am quite sure you will acknowledge it.

There are some curious, and extremely dangerous situations involved in the invalidating of the Frazier-Lemke act. I cannot help thinking too, that it would be a good law to make permanent. It would tend to preclude so much inflated credit. The real estate men would not hold out such glowing promises to prospective buyers. They would be much more careful about the credit they extended.

Our case was called a perfect case under the Frazier-Lemke law because it dealt with this subject of inflated credit. The mortgage in question was not given for a cash loan, but only for the balance of a purchase price, in other words, for inflated credit. It covers simply what was unpaid of the purchase price plus some unpaid interest. The amount paid by the buyer on this purchase price to date is $6,100, plus $6,125 in interest, or a total of $12,225. In addition the buyer has paid for all the improvements on the property which have amounted to $8,500, making a grand total of cost to the purchaser of $20,725. When this property was recently appraised by the federal court, it was valued at $5,000.

The curious part of the supreme court decision is that it held the Frazier-Lemke act invalid, while holding amendment No. 77 valid. One in in direct opposition to the other, for both do the same thing, only amendment No. 77 is for big business, while the Frazier-Lemke amendment was for the farmer

The constitution requires that all bankruptcy laws shall be uniform. This matter was fully discussed in the Senate at the time the Frazier - Lemke amendment was introduced. Senator Shipstead summed up this point as follows:

"The principle involved, of applying to agriculture the same rule which we apply to a corporation or to a municipality is absolutely sound. Any other provision would violate one of the most fundamental principles of the American system of government; or, of any other government that pretends to dispense justice among its citizens—the principle of equality before the law."

Amendment No. 77 was also contested as unconstitutional. The case was reversed, however, the debtor was a big railroad. The case came up to the supreme court, and the railroad was allowed to stop foreclosure proceedings; retain possession of its property; scale down its indebtedness, not only as to principal but as to interest, and to pay its creditors by a new issue of bonds in the lesser amount. The supreme court held that law valid, and reversed itself by declaring the Frazier-Lemke act invalid. In this case it was a big bank against a poor farmer. Why the difference? Does not this make inequality before the law? Is not this a lack of uniformity in the bankruptcy laws? Why is such a law valid when it helps big business to reorganize and dishonest and unconstitutional when it helps the farmer to reorganize? Has robbing the farmer become such a vested right of the moneyed interest that it has even affected the supreme court?

The editor of the Pacific Coast Rural Press is another outspoken man like yourself, and this is what he has to say in regard to the invalidating of the Frazier-Lemke amendment:

"Of course the Frazier-Lemke amendment was helpful in many cases. It constituted a knobby club which might be swung as a last resort But a lot of good settlements were made before the Frazier-Lemke amendment was passed, and a lot more dan be arrived at since its demise.

"The point is here: There are few mortagage Shylocks so hardened that they will carve a greedy pound of flesh after a committee of fair and able local debt adjusters have suggested that the demands are excessive.

"If Shylock can take his pound of flesh without witnesses, and slink away unobserved, he may do so, but with prominent local residents offering a kindly and constructive suggestion of something fair to both sides, real democracy is in operation."

Here's hoping we may see some "real democracy in operation."

Editorial Comment

NORMAN H. PARKS, Publisher Register

lent; and his idea, largely popularized by Huey Long, should have been incorporated into law and practice many years ago.

It is going to be difficult for the American people to believe that the President is other than a good friend of immense capital. Nothing so far in his administration has lead any intelligent man to the conclusion that the executive views with alarm the vast holdings of the Morgans, the Astors, the Duponts and the Rockefellers. As governor of New York he never came in conflict with the mighty financial monarchs of that Empire state.

Should the Democratic majority push through this startling tax program before adjournment, then it would be the natural conclusion that sincerity was back of the movement; and, after all, it was not merely a gesture to take the wind out of the spreading sails of the Louisiana senator. But would that conclusion, natural though it might seem, be correct? We think not. The immense expenditures of the Roosevelt political machine are bleeding the great middle class, who have always carried the tax burden, to death. Money must be gotten somewhere; if not, then the functioning of the New Deal must be trimmed. That, of course, would not do. Every man taken off the public payroll is a man lost to the vast Democratic political machine primed to win another nomination and election for its titular leader.

However faint our faith may be in the present regime, we shall watch with interest the President's avowed intention to curb the power of wealth, and equalize to some extent the distribution of money and property in the United States; and be it crowned with any success, applaud as lustily as any member of the federal patronage brigade.
